

OT Soldier Selected to Sing at Panthers Game!

CPT Christy Green, a soldier assigned to Moncrief Army Hospital, was selected to sing the National Anthem at the Carolina Panthers' football game in Charlotte, N.C. over Veteran's Day weekend.

Green opened the game against the reigning Super Bowl champions, the Tampa Bay Buccaneers, and sang "God Bless America" during the halftime show.

The focus of the entertainment throughout the game was to honor veterans for Veterans' Day.

CPT Green serves as an Occupational Therapist at Moncrief where she works primarily with patients who have sustained injuries or conditions that affect their hands and arms, and is the lead therapist for inpatient Occupational Therapy.

Throughout her life CPT Green has used her special talent to sing in various church, school and community choirs.

When asked about her future plans, CPT Green replied, "God has blessed me with the gift of singing, and I plan to use it for his glory as much as he allows me to. My ultimate dream would be to become a contemporary Christian singer." She said that ever since she was young, she wanted to become the next Amy Grant.

Moncrief is very proud of her accomplishments and the outstanding opportunities that await her!

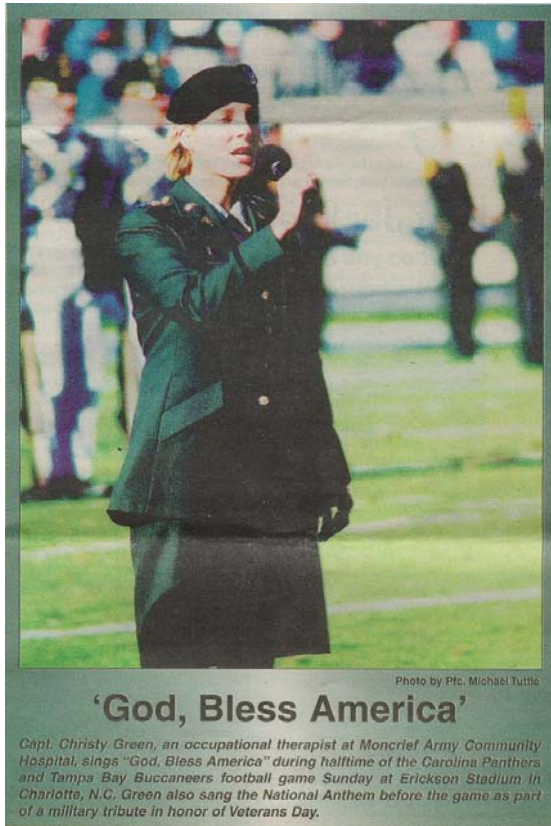

Photo by Pfc. Michael Tuttle

'God, Bless America'

Capt. Christy Green, an occupational therapist at Moncrief Army Community Hospital, sings "God, Bless America" during halftime of the Carolina Panthers and Tampa Bay Buccaneers football game Sunday at Erickson Stadium in Charlotte, N.C. Green also sang the National Anthem before the game as part of a military tribute in honor of Veterans Day.